Brittle deformation. Fractures are forms of brittle deformation. There are two types of primary brittle deformation processes. Tensile fracturing results in joints. Shear fractures are the first initial breaks resulting from shear forces exceeding the cohesive strength in that plane.. After those two initial deformations, several other types of secondary brittle deformation can be observed ...

Watch video for better and quick understanding Earth Movements Our earth is undergoing deformations imperceptibly but continuously. These deformations are caused by the movements generated by various factors like The heat generated by the radioactive elements in earth's interior. Movement of the crustal plates due to tectogenesis. Forces generated by rotation of the earth.
